5 Easy Ways to Hurry Spring

For most gardeners, spring never comes soon enough. I'm not a patient person to start with, and waiting until May to get out in my garden is torture. So let's not wait. Here are five things to do right now that will get you and your garden into spring-mode. ▶ Continue ...

How to Harvest Bushels of Potatoes

The hard part about growing potatoes is the amount of space they require in the garden. Plus, hilling and harvesting can be hard, back-straining work. For years, we were looking for an easier way to consistently produce a large harvest of potatoes in a compact, easy-to-manage space.

The solution: a space-efficient, raised-bed system. ▶ Continue ...

Growing Community – Up on the Roof

While "a tree may grow in Brooklyn", there's a whole rooftop garden growing in Manhattan. Perched on the sixth floor of an apartment house in Greenwich Village is a rooftop garden inspired and created by Denise Holness Jackson. Seven years ago, Denise looked at the vacant rooftop and envisioned a garden that would be a refuge from the concrete of the city and a meeting place for neighbors. With help from the building superintendent, Jimmy Ward, her vision has become a reality. ▶ Continue ...

Delphinium Envy

I wish marigolds did it for me. Why is it that we always crave the flowers that are most difficult for us to grow? In my garden the soil is heavy and shallow. Winters are cold (zone 4) and snow cover is pretty undependable. Summers can be warm and humid. The prevailing southerly winds are strong, and they funnel right up the valley into my perennial border. It's not a very good situation for delphiniums. ▶ Continue ...
