Climbing Plants Add a New Dimension to Your Garden

By Kathy Laliberte

Growing up rather than out saves space in the garden and lets you enjoy lots of great vine plants such as sugar snap peas, pole beans, moonflowers, bougainvillea, and clematis. To ensure success, you'll want to match the right plants with the right sort of support.

Short on Space?

How To Grow Vegetables in Containers

Ed Smith, author of The Vegetable Gardener's Bible, has been growing organic vegetables in his backyard for more than 40 years. Several years ago, after growing some tomatoes in one of our Self-Watering Planters, he began to think about the possibilities of growing other kinds of vegetables in self-watering containers. These musings evolved into a full-blown backyard research project.

Patio Makeover:

Ho-Hum Backyard Becomes a Perfect Summer Retreat

Our first-ever makeover contest was a resounding success. In fact, the tremendous response took us by surprise—we received almost 1,000 entries from across the country! There were many deserving patios to choose from, but we finally chose a winner: Barbara Satterwhite of Oxford, N.C. Not only did her patio exemplify many common problems, but it was a great example of what could be done in one weekend. When we called Barbara to let her know we were coming to make over her patio, she replied "I can't believe it! I have never won anything before!"

Trellises Take Your Garden to New Heights

There are all sorts of good reasons to consider adding an arbor, pergola, tuteur or another type of freestanding trellis to your garden this spring. The primary reason is simple: These structures create focal points, add vertical interest, enclose a view and define spaces.
