AUGUST 2008

Take a Tour of Our Backyard

It's high summer and our display gardens are at their best. Though lots of customers visit us here in Burlington, Vt., not everyone can make the trip. So, we've put together a few short slide shows to give you a peek at what's in bloom, and let you see some of the projects we've been working on this season.

Sarah Tapauskas is the gardener extraordinaire who single-handedly maintains all 3 acres of our display gardens. It's a remarkable feat that she handles with incredible enthusiasm, determination and creativity. Thank you Sarah! We hope you'll join us for a quick tour of our backyard. Continue ...

Four New Slideshows:

Filling Gaps in the Flower Garden

If you want to keep your perennial borders looking great from May through September, you need to be prepared to fill a few holes. Many perennials, including peonies, Siberian irises and hostas, look great throughout the growing season. But there are lots of other perennials that let themselves go. In fact, some of them wither away completely once they've flowered.

Here are a few techniques that fill, hide or disguise midsummer gaps. Continue ...

Show Off Your Vegetable Garden

by Kathy LaLiberte

Making your vegetable garden into a place where you want to linger, means thinking about design as well as production. Like a painter with a canvas, your job becomes one of attracting the eye and keeping it engaged in the scene. When people visit my gardens, I always find it surprising how many of them gravitate to the vegetable garden. The lilies and peonies may be looking fabulous, but what they're really curious about is the garlic and the peppers. Continue ...
